Federation of Noxus

Introduction:: FEDERATION OF NOXUS

Background:

Blodfjell traders landed at the southern tip of the modern day Zulu Province of the Federation of Noxus in 1652 and established a stopover point on the spice route between the Netherlands and the Far East, founding the city of Cape Town. After the Empire of Blodfjell began moving farther into Africa to begin searching for useful natural resources (Blodfjell treated the entirety of Africa as an administrative district since 1710), some of the permanent Blodfjell settlers (called Landwirts "farmers") trekked farther north to start mining and logging colonies in lands taken from the indigenous black inhabitants. Seeing that their land was threatened, the indigenous blacks - in particular the Zulu - took it upon themselves to attempt to prevent further exploitation of land. The new discovery of large veins of gold (1824) and pockets of diamond (1827) spurred enormous wealth amongst the Zulu, and gave them enormous influence over neighboring indigenous tribes. The Afrikaners had picked up on the wealth of the Zulu people over time, and on October 17, 1854, war broke out between Zulu and Afrikaners in an attempt to gain the upper hand on the Zulu wealth and land. Using their familiarity with the land and ability to replicate abandoned European weapons quickly, the Zulu were able to end the war decisively on February 2, 1855 with the signing of the Landwirt-Zulu Treaty of 1855. This began a partnership between both parties to educate each other. By 1939, the Landwirt and Zulu partnership had become so strong that they had continuously challenged the authority of Blodfjell at Cape Town and Cairo, and expanded their influence and spread their message of education and advancement of industrial technology to the southern Sahel. With Boer and Zulu military technology generally ahead of European military technology, and with Blodfjell mobilizing for the upcoming, extremely bloody Russo-Nordic War, Blodfjell military forces were forced to retreat from Cape Town and Cairo, and on June 19, 1939, the entire continent of Africa was declared a federation, named the Federation of Noxus. The Russo-Nordic war provided an opportunity for the Federation to become even more unified and proceed with technological development at breakneck speed. Population control was additionally mandated a year after independence, and the seat of government was placed, after moving from city to city, in the Shabunda Province of the former Blodfjell-declared Democratic Republic of Congo. Advancement in war and aeronautics technology in the years after Noxian independence proved invaluable in repelling the Blodfjell Empire's several later attempted advances in 2001, 2016, 2019, and 2024. Following the third attempt at invasion, an increase of 5.25% of GNP (purchasing power parity) from 4.37% on defense spending was instituted, which does not include private and public corporations independently invested into the defense industry at the time. Buoyed by their ability to deflect encroaching control from the Blodfjell Empire and refusing to outsource any labor, the Federation remains the solar system's leader in defense technology, development of interstellar travel, off-planet mining and commerce, and a leader in citizens with completion of higher education.
